Reasons for the revision

For the consolidated business forecast for the first half of FY2026 and FY2026, the Company has considered and reviewed the latest demand trends, foreign exchange movements, and risks of fluctuations in raw material costs arising from turmoil in the Middle East situation comprehensively, based on the results for the three months ended March 31, 2026.

Net sales are expected to increase compared to the previous forecast because product demand for the tablet in the Devices segment and the field of decorations in the Industrial Materials segment progressed more than initially expected for the three months ended March 31, 2026, combined with the impact on foreign exchange movements under a weaker yen environment.

Operating profit is also expected to exceed the previous forecast, reflecting increased profits driven by higher net sales while taking into account the risks of fluctuations in raw material costs. Furthermore, profit before tax and profit attributable to owners of parent are expected to exceed the previous forecast, due to the above factors, as well as foreign exchange gains recorded during the three months ended March 31, 2026.

In addition, the foreign exchange rate assumptions are 155 yen per U.S. dollar for the six months ending June 30, 2026 (previous forecast: 145 yen) and 150 yen per U.S. dollar for the full fiscal year (previous forecast: 145 yen).
